AN OBSTRUCTED GRAVE POSTPONES FUNERAL

The burial of the late William C. Roe did not take place yesterday afternoon as expected, although the funeral services were held at the St. Andrew's Cathedral and the body taken to the Nuanu cemetery. The postponement was enforced because the gravediggers encountered a huge boulder in their work, to remove which dynamite will have to be used.

The funeral services were held at a vault at the cemetery, where the body now lies awaiting the final interment this morning at eleven o'clock.

A large number attended the funeral yesterday. The pallbearers were Charles Crozier, Thomas Smith, William Allen, John Richardson, Charles Lewis, Bernard F. Joy, Harold E. Hansen and Emil Ruehling.

DIAS WANTS TORUN THE WAIPAHU SALOON

License Inspector Fennell went down to Waipahu yesterday to verify the signatures on the application of Jose Dias, who wants a saloon license. The saloon which Dias wishes to run is now in operation, permission having been granted to keep it open pending the settlement of the estate of the late owner, P. A. Dias, who died in Switzerland. The son has concluded that he wants to keep the place going, so has applied for a license. Fennell found the signatures on the application in due form, and the way is clear for the granting of the license, as far as the property holders of the neighborhood are concerned.

Capt. J. H. Black, one of the early proprietors of the Advertiser, arrived in Philadelphia safely, and has written here. He found the city of his birth too big for him. A hill he used to play on he could not recognize. There were too many houses on it. "I find there is very little news here," said the venerable ex-Honolulu. "except of murders and fires." Capt. Black, who had been away from Philadelphia nearly half a century, will write a letter to this paper of his experiences. His sister went to San Francisco to meet him, but neither knew the other. When they were introduced, the reunion was a very happy one.

The polo ponies left for Lihue on the mystic hour of sunrise yesterday. There will be twelve of them available for the Oahuans, although the locals expect to use only two apiece.
